

BISC 544 – Advanced Reading in Molecular Biology
Spring 2020

Meeting: There is no specific meeting time for this course.

Course director: Prof. Carolyn Phillips
Office: RRI 304B
email: cphil@usc.edu

Course Objectives: The course objectives are to advance the training of molecular biology PhD students in reading primary journal articles. Emphasis will be on honing critical reading skills.

Format: Students will attend a journal club hosted by a lab of their choice. Because most first year PhD students are doing rotations, most students choose their second or third rotation lab, but they have the option to choose the first rotation lab, or any other lab of their choosing that has a regularly scheduled (approx. weekly) journal club. The student must present at least one paper during the semester and be an active participant in the rest of the meetings. Students are required to inform the course director (Carolyn Phillips – cphil@usc.edu) of their selected journal club during the first week of classes. The faculty advisor for that journal club will then determine whether the student has met the requirement of regular attendance, participation, and presentation of a paper, and report to the course director.
