Course Description
This course will expose students to the influential "law and economics" approach to analyzing law and legal institutions. Using basic tools of microeconomics (some background in economics is helpful, not required), the course explores the core common law subjects of property, contracts and torts as well as civil procedure, criminal law and other advanced topics in private and public law. Law and economics examines law from the perspective of designing efficient or wealth-maximizing systems. The course will explore the philosophical foundations of law and economics, as well as various critiques of the approach.

Learning Objectives
Students should be able to ...
- Understand how courts and academia began to apply social science techniques and measurements to legal issues, and the impact this has had on scholarship and in policy making.
- Understand how basic economic concepts interact with the law.
- Discern where it is useful to apply economic analysis frameworks to legal issues, and apply economic frameworks to resolve legal issues.
- Be able to recognize the use of economic analysis in government, private, and corporate public policy making.
- Be aware of how economic analysis can impact legal decision making on local and state level, as well as in the national arena in circuit courts and the Supreme Court.
- Articulate arguments for and against the use of conventional economic frameworks in law making and judicial opinions. Be able to articulately discuss such frameworks with peers.
