Office Hours: Thursday afternoons, 3.00–5.00 pm, MHP 107

Course description
This class will explore the philosophy of the ancient Greek and Roman Stoics, covering a period of almost 500 years, from the earliest Stoics (early 3rd century, c. 300 BCE) to the last of the great ancient Stoics, the Roman Emperor Marcus Aurelius (121–180 CE).

Our study of their philosophy will fall into six parts:

1. In Part 1, we will cover the historical background, and will start with an introductory examination of some classic Stoic texts.

2. In Part 2, we will study Stoic physics (which for the Stoics included what we think of as theology, cosmology, and metaphysics).

3. In Part 3, we will study Stoic logic (which for them included their theory of knowledge, and their response to their opponents, the ancient Sceptics).

4. In Part 4, we will study Stoic ethics – their most distinctive and influential contribution to philosophy.

5. In Part 5, we will study the Stoics’ notorious fatalism – their view that everything that ever happens was fated to happen.

6. In Part 6, we will look at the influence of Stoicism on later philosophy.

Reading

Most of the central primary texts will be in:

- Brad Inwood and Lloyd Gerson, eds., The Stoics Reader: Selected Writings and Testimonia (Hackett, 2008).

You should get hold of a copy of this book (either a hard copy or an electronic copy). All the other required readings will be made available online on the course Blackboard site.
The most important primary texts that will be made available online are selections from the following:

In almost every class, a handout will be distributed. These handouts will typically contain some additional primary texts that are not these volumes. These additional texts will mostly be taken from the following:

We shall also read much of the following secondary text (also available online):

A couple of additional pieces of secondary literature will also be made available online.

Another recommended introductory secondary text, which should be available from the campus bookstore, is the following:

After the first week, every class meeting will involve discussion of some passages from the primary texts, which will be assigned to you to read before the meeting. You should bring Inwood and Gerson, The Stoics Reader to every meeting of class.

Course Objectives

One primary objective of this course is for you to come to an in-depth understanding of the Stoics’ philosophical thought. Since the works of all the older Stoics have been lost, this involves reconstructing their thought from many different pieces of evidence. In this way, this goal will involve reading, understanding, and interpreting a wide range of difficult and complex texts that were written many centuries ago, and presenting and defending your interpretations of Stoic thought both in your written work and in your contributions to our class discussions. Interpreting and defending these texts will also involve thinking critically about the philosophical issues that the Stoics themselves were grappling with.

After taking this course, you will have acquired an understanding of the Stoics’ main ideas and arguments. More importantly, (i) you will have improved your ability for independently reading and comprehending challenging texts – in a way that will enable you to see how these texts can be used as evidence, to identify and state the main claims of these texts, and to reconstruct the texts’ key arguments in favour of these claims; (ii) you will also have developed your skills at critically evaluating such claims and arguments; and (iii) you will have practised your skills at giving clear and persuasive arguments of your own – both in your writing and in your contribution to oral discussions – to defend your interpretation and evaluations of these claims and arguments.

Normal prerequisites
The normal prerequisite for this course is two Philosophy courses. (Others may enrol with my permission.)

Assessments and Grading
There will be one take-home test on the historical background, two paper assignments, and a take-home final exam.

1. The test on the historical background will focus on part 1 of the course, due at the end of Week 3. (Your answers on this test should amount to about 800 words.)

2. The first paper assignment will on parts 2–3 of the course, due at the end of Week 7.
(Your paper should be about 2000 words long.)

3. The second paper assignment will be on part 4 of the course, due at the end of Week 12.
(Your paper should be about 2000 words long.)

4. The final exam will cover the first five parts of the course, and will be due during the final exam period after the end of classes. (In total, your answers to this final exam should amount to about 2000 words.)

Suggested paper topics for the paper assignments, along with guidance about how to approach the topic, will be distributed at least two weeks before the due date. You may submit a rough draft at least a week in advance, and I will give you some comments. (You may also write your paper on a different topic if you wish – but only after consultation with me.)

All assessments should be turned in electronically via the course Blackboard site.

Your grade will be calculated as follows:

- 10% for the test on the historical background
- 30% for each of the two paper assignments
- 30% for the final exam

Office Hours
I will be holding office hours on Thursday afternoons, 3.00–5.00 pm. Office hours are an opportunity for you to ask questions about the class or the readings, but they’re also a chance to chat about how the course is going, to tell me about your ideas about any of the philosophical issues we’re discussing, to test out a plan for one of your papers on me, or to ask for general advice. Don’t hesitate to take advantage of this opportunity.
